I tell not thy many productions, I know that a thousand at least Of various plants here are rampant To grace a botanical feast: From various climes they have wandered, And found a sure footing with thee, Who ever a warm hand and welcome Hast tendered with love true and free. I know that thy woods are invested With music on pinions so rich, That the eye cannot weary of watching For those that our glances bewitch: Nor the ear be fatigued with the phrases All woven of notes clear and soft, That, uttered amid the dark branches, Are calling our spirits aloft. I know that thy waters are crowded With loveliest life that can move, Amid growths of a flowering sea-bed That Heavens best handiworks prove. No wonder that Moore at his leisure, From work that the Admiral...
