Excerpt: . open and exposed to death. So he also teaches when he quotes the sad words addressed by Elijah to God, I am left alone, and they seek my life, or soul (psyche). So far from thinking the psyche inaccessible, both Paul and Elijah agreed in thinking it exposed to the attacks of men to kill and to destroy it. John teaches us the same truth in the book of Revelation, where, from the adjective living, attached to the Greek psyche, our unfortunate translators were unable to avoid the use of the word soul, which, in every similar case where they could help it, they have scrupulously shunned. Every living soul died in the sea. Here we are told that in natural death the soul dies, and this expression is all the stronger from having the adjective living attached to soul. t Once more,...
